February 28, 2013

Dear Honorable Elected Representative,

Students across these United States wish to express our concern about the looming sequestration cuts and the impact it could have on education in America. We speak on behalf of the 3.8 million graduate students across the nation and stand with the 28 million students enrolled in colleges and universities within our country. The future of education in this country is in peril. If the country faces sequestration, we will not only see billions of dollars cut indiscriminately from federal research funding, we also will experience devastating cuts in graduate student fellowships, research assistantships, research projects and student aid. The bottom line will be drastically reduced graduate studies and an even less promising employment environment.

What does this mean for students and their institutions?

* Projected reductions of funding in various programs could result in thousands of fewer grants with an estimated $12.1 billion loss in federal research and development. An across the board cut could deeply erode several programs in the sciences, the humanities, and other fields. Cuts to the NSF could dramatically affect the more than 140,000 people supported through their funding.

* Cuts to other federal agencies will only increase the number of students affected. Ultimately, this means fewer people employed at our universities and a halt to our economic prosperity and innovation capacity.

But even more widely, the effects of going off the cliff will touch all Americans. The innovation and productivity that has been spawned by student research at universities across this country is unparalleled. Over half of the United States' economic growth in the past five decades has been an indirect effect of federal investments in STEM education and research. We were key players in the 80,000 patents generated from NSF funded research, the tens of thousands of new companies formed, the hundreds of thousands of new jobs created, and the economic success that has made the United States the world leader in innovation and technology. If this unprecedented output of American economic and societal drivers is to continue and accelerate in the years to come, investments in graduate research and education must be maintained.

We know that difficult economic conditions call for tough decisions. We understand that spending cuts may be necessary and revenue must be increased. What we ask is that these decisions be developed in a balanced way. As our elected representative, we urge you to remember the needs of the educational sector, the STEM, social science and humanities fields and graduate students as we arrive at this critical juncture. We ask that you bring to the table the understanding that what is at stake is far greater than just funding for graduate students, but the future of this country in the decades and generations to come.

Sincerely (on behalf of the nearly 1,000 attached students),

Meredith Niles
