FAARM Project

What is the FAARM Project?

- Nationwide, student-led effort to improve quality of research mentorship.
- Named after the project's core proposal, the Framework for Accountability in Academic Research and Mentoring (FAARM, or 'the Federal Framework').
- Created to address the mental health crisis faced by graduate students, which was caused in part by a lack of training and accountability for PIs and other research advisors.

What is the focus of FAARM?

- Developing policy proposals that can be implemented by research institutions, federal research funding agencies (FRFAs), and state and federal legislators.
- The FAARM Federal Framework and each individual proposal are designed to incentivize nationwide improvements in the culture of academic mentorship.

How can you help graduate students?

Implementation of FAARM proposals would provide:

- New channels for research trainees (including grad students) to provide feedback on their advisors' performance and report acute problems.
- Across-the-board requirements for mentorship training for every PI that might advise research trainees.
- Comprehensive publicly-available data on time-to-degree, attrition rates, and graduate student mental health.
- Strong incentives for research institutions to only hire and promote effective mentors.

How can you help advance FAARM?

- The FAARM Team is seeking additional graduate student organizations and governments to endorse the Framework and join our congressional outreach efforts. This quick-start guide provides material that can help present FAARM to your organization.
- The FAARM team meets every other week, typically on Thursday evenings. All research trainees and allies are welcome. Join our email list!
